Amongst the many functions of plastic playhouses is its capability to stimulate the imaginative minds of the children through role playing. Children are natural role players.

They love to imagine and create a world where they pretend to be somebody else. This is why most modern playhouses are designed with features that encourage children to explore.

One of the major benefits children derive from role playing in their playhouse is socialization. With one, two or many friends to play around with, they learn how to mingle, share and do their part in the role play.

Plastic playhouses are conceived because most children love to have a space, particularly a house, of their own. They love to role play as a family, having somebody as a mother, a father and kids. They even imitate the normal atmosphere inside their homes. In a way, they learn through it the value of family bonding.

Role playing is a form of adventure as well as education for children and one of the key ways of delivering it to the children is providing them with playhouses that would stimulate their imagination.
